

CAVE CREEK COMES DOWN 4 MILES WIDE

Cave Creek had real man sized aspirations yesterday afternoon, and following what must have been a terrible deluge in the mountains north of Phoenix, that waterway, increased in size so fast, that there was no holding it in bounds. The south bank of the Arizona canal gave way under the pressure, and the steady march southward was started.

The sweep of waters was in some places four miles wide. Crossing Northern avenue, just south of the canal, the water was doing some damage to the ranches. Some young orange orchards in that district were uprooted, and cattle were in a more or less precarious situation. The roar of the rushing water could be heard a mile away. The tracks of the Phoenix Street Railway company, which run just south of Northern avenue, were inundated for over a mile. The water was hungrily eating at the roadbed, and it was the general opinion that it had been washed away in several places. The full extent of the damage could not be ascertained, as without the aid of a motor boat it was impossible to get close to the marooned sections. There are several ranches which are lakes now, the ranch houses forming islands of refuge.

The Grand canal saved Phoenix and Glendale from a good soaking. All water was let out just south of the canal, and the wild running waters of Cave Creek reached its banks, they were speedily conducted away in an orderly manner.

The flood in that district yesterday was worse than it was last winter. Although Glendale was mercifully spared, the ranches were harder hit. The flood water came to within a half mile of Central avenue.

CRAIG BUILDING IS DAMAGED BY RAIN

The most serious damage resulting from the storm was sustained by the occupants of the Craig building at the corner of Second avenue and Adams street. In the office of the Underwood Typewriter company a leaking roof let in the flood from the cloudburst at one o'clock and large sections of the heavy plastering of the ceiling both in the front office and the rear workroom came crashing down. Manager R. E. Henley was seated at a machine in the rear room and just before a section of the ceiling fell not less than six feet in diameter, he was called away. He had just moved away when the crash came. A part of the ceiling caught him on the arm. The center of the section fell upon the typewriter at which he had been seated with such force that it broke it hopelessly and knocked the carriage off. Two other machines were damaged and also either a loss estimated at $600 was sustained.

The water gathered in the court yard of this building, the surface of which is on a level with the rooms. The water flowed into them damaging whatever was within reach. The principal losers from water were the Mutual Film service and the Singer Sewing machine company.

FIFTY BREAKS IN ARLINGTON CANAL

Fifty breaks in the Arlington canal was the report received from that district by Supervisor G. W. Peterson late yesterday afternoon as a result of the heavy rains.

According to the telephone message to Mr. Peterson it commenced to rain in Arlington early Friday morning and a steady downpour continued throughout the day and it was still raining last evening. It was estimated that three inches of rain had fallen.

Mr. Peterson who owns considerable property in that section, believes the good done by the rain far offsets the damage. He declared that the amount of repair work necessitated by the breaks in the canal is as nothing compared to the benefits to be derived by the crops. The farmers and cattlemen will profit in large amounts, he says.

WILLIAMS IS JAILED ON SERIOUS CHARGE

Entering an automobile with the promise of being driven to her home and raced to the desert where she was cruelly wronged was the story told the probation officers yesterday by Ruth Patterson, a pretty fifteen-year-old girl employed in a confectionery store in this city. She named Carlton Williams, the step son of Jack Elliott, as the guilty man.

Between heartbroken sobs the girl pleaded that her parents be kept in ignorance of the affair.

"Do not tell them," she cried pitifully.

On the other hand she willingly told the officers everything declaring that the treatment she had received from Williams had forced her down and down until she no longer cared what became of her.

It was her theft of a dress that led the police to unravel the story which is one of the most tragic in the annals of the juvenile court.

The girl was employed by a confectionery firm. About a fortnight ago a dress was missed from the room where the dressmaker change their frocks for uniforms. Ruth Patterson was suspected and when Policeman Stewart questioned her she admitted her guilt adding that she had stolen other articles. At the same time she volunteered "I had fallen so low I did not care what I did." In revealing her story she gave a complete account of the part Williams played in her life and the police immediately arrested him and held him pending investigation. The county attorney's office issued a warrant for his arrest and he is now behind the bars in the county jail.

The girl said that some weeks ago Williams stopped in front of Donofrio's and offered to take her home in his car. The Pattersons live near the Indian school and after a long day's work the ride was a boon to the girl. She readily accepted. Instead of stopping at her home, Williams going at a terrific rate of speed, made directly for the desert according to Ruth. Her horrible experience completely altered her life, she declared and she had no love for her father. She began to take little things from the employees of Donofrio's and later accepted a position at the Super Bowl where she was at the time the officers sought her. She stated at once that she would return the dress, pins and other articles she had taken, but the detective of her theft was lost on her face. How much she loved her father, she declared, she could not tell. She had completed her work. The time of when she was placed on him, Williams declared, and when out by the desert she had no love for him.

The story was the common gossip of the pool halls last night where Williams is generally to be found. About a week ago he was married to Grace Schmitt, who at the time of her marriage was a ward of the juvenile court. Mrs. Williams left her husband last summer and is said to be in Alhambra. Williams is employed in an automobile repair shop and has become known to the police by his wild escapades.

The Pattersons have a small home west of the city. Nearly a year ago the house in which they lived was destroyed by fire and they lost the savings of many years. Mrs. Patterson is a domestic and her mother is employed in a hotel. Williams, who is said to be devotedly attached to their daughter Ruth.

GLENDALÉ HAS FOUR FEET OF WATER IN DOWN TOWN STREETS

serious washout was the result. Although work was immediately begun on the creek, train service was held up until a late hour last night.

Two minor washouts were also reported yesterday; one between Phoenix and Yuma, and the other between Phoenix and Tempe. Train service, however, was only delayed a very short time, and now trains are running on schedule again as before.

FLOODS FROM SKIES, DESERTS

There were two floods yesterday—one from the skies and the other from practically every gully running off the desert. Numberless breaks are reported in the canal system, roads are washed out, railroad communication on some lines is delayed and some fields are flooded. Cave Creek, that old offender, continued to come down in large volume, hacking a four mile section out of the Arizona canal, already overloaded with flood water from up Paradise way.

There were four breaks in the Arizona canal where Cave Creek strikes it yesterday morning, and the service on the Glendale line of the Phoenix Street Railway company was interrupted by the sheet of water that flowed down the sloping fields and buried the tracks.

Tempe Road was under a foot to 18 inches of water in a score of places between the Asylum and the power house, and there was a washout on the Arizona Eastern between here and Tempe.

Breaks in the Consolidated canal below Chandler were reported to the project manager yesterday morning. Slight breaks were recorded in the Eastern canal, caused by water coming down off the desert.

Some Facts Publish Themselves

The difference between the new and old kind of store is easily perceivable.

It is just as easy to keep a "be at home" house, neighborhood house, as it is to keep a clean house, a cheerful house or an orderly, comfortable house.

When one comes here once he is sure to learn something, and he wonders why he did not come before and see what modernized storekeeping is.

The attendants are all human but none above their business when they show the welcome which is clearly a settled part of their duty.

All eyes brighten in doing things, small or great, pleasantly.

It is fair to say that this is a well furnished store with sales large enough to require new goods daily, which keeps the store fresh.

Inadequate to carry off the Paradise valley flood last night and the canal was cut in three places, two this side and one the other side of the waste gates. With the breaking of the canal tanks, road communication with Granite Reef dam was stopped on the north side, but the phone line remained in operation.

Project Manager W. S. Cone stated yesterday that it was impossible to estimate the amount of damage to the canal system, though he believed it would not nearly approximate that of the winter floods of 1915-16. The impossibility of automobile travel to the remote parts of the project and the interruption of telephone lines make it hard to get an accurate line on what the flood has done. Every man the reclamation service could get together was sent to the breaks in the Arizona Canal on Cave Creek, but the task of turning back the flood soon proved out of the power of human hands. Many in the later gangs could not even reach the places to which they had been assigned.

Short Sharp Shower

In ten minutes around one-thirty yesterday afternoon, 40 inches of rain fell in Phoenix. It was the sharpest shower of many years. The total rainfall at six yesterday morning was 1.11 inches, and by mid-afternoon, had reached 1.55 inches, which beats the normal rainfall for the month of September, which is 1.01 inches.

September records back as far as 1903 have been exceeded already this month. On September 27-27, 1903, 1.72 inches fell, and the following year, another deluge of 1.19 inches fell on the 12 and 13 of the month. The big record was in 1897, when 1.93 inches fell in the 11th, with a monthly total of 3.67.

Wild reports of stock drowned and farms washed bodily away were denied by project authorities. While there is probably some damage to standing crops, it is considered trivial, in consideration of the benefits of the rainfall to other agricultural and stock interests.
